Detective Shot, Keeps Gunmen Of Chinatown From Prisoner

Automatic pistols, equipped with silencers, were used by a score of reputed gangsters in a riot that resulted from an arrest in Mott Street, at the edge of Chinatown, yesterday afternoon. Charles Meisenzahl, of the narcotic squad, held a mob of three hundred excited residents of the quarter at bay with drawn revolver, while clinging to a prisoner with his other hand. At his feet lay Detective Patrick J. Kirley, who had been shot twice in the head, but was still fighting. The prisoner, too, was injured.

Reserves arrived from the Elizabeth Street station, in response to a riot call, and put down the disturbance. At St. Vincent's Hospital, where Kirley was taken, Dr. Miceli found two wounds at the base of the brain. Both bullets had glanced off, but one had fractured Kirley's skull. His condition is serious. The two detectives were searching for youths suspected of vending cocaine, heroin and other drugs to school children. They encountered Antonio Scinto and recognized him as a suspect. The detectives were wary, because Dr. Carleton Simon, head of the police narcotic division, had received anonymous communications announcing that any detectives making arrests in the districts would be killed.

Meisenzahl approached Scinto and says he purchased a "deck" of cocaine. He placed him under arrest and Kirley came up. Scinto began to cry in Italian for help and the street filled with a pulling and pushing throng.

Rocks, sticks of wood and empty bottles soon began to fly. The detectives threatened to shoot, and as they did so several noiseful shots were fired from the mob. More than one missile struck the prisoner and he fell, with Meisenzahl still holding to his shirt collar. Two of the bullets struck Kirley, and he staggered, but continued fighting off the crowd before he fell.

Scinto was taken to headquarters, after the reserves arrived, and thence to St. Vincent's Hospital, where his wounds were dressed. He then was taken back to jail.

kind of investigation. One day they work in overalls on the docks, the next in a white collar in a bank. And the work is so complicated that mere experience is not enough, though it will always be the biggest factor. The man on the street cannot make a bigger mistake than to say that there is nothing about a detective's trade that can be learned out of books."

Cotton Goods Firm As Raw Fiber Drops

Higher Prices Quoted on Underwear; Staple Fabric Makers Warning

The slip-back in raw cotton prices yesterday had little or no effect upon the prices of cotton goods, which in the unfinished state were quoted as high as they were last week. Some brokers reported that print cloths and other constructions of gray goods were hard to get at prevailing market prices and that many orders received during the day were unfilled because of the unwillingness of the mills to accept the market price for their goods.

Some underwear sales agents who withdrew quotations last week replaced them yesterday with slightly higher prices.

The sensational rise in raw cotton and gray goods, according to a prominent converter, has not stimulated the demand for finished fabrics. "The volume of business," he said, "is not larger than it was before the price rise. The cutting up trades are not interested in prices of cotton goods, since their own products, the finished garments, are moving slowly."

Manufacturers of percales and other finished goods which follow gray goods prices closely are loath to announce new prices, feeling, some of them say, that the market is not stabilized at present. It is conceded, however, that new prices on most of the staple cotton goods will be higher than the last prices named.

Woman Asks $2,500,000 for Keeping Secret

Granddaughter of Late Mrs. Roxy Smith Claims This for Not Telling of Uncle's Marriage to Opera Singer

To Split 50-50, She Says

Asks Receiver for Estate and Injunction When He Refuses to Divide Millions

Justice Lydon yesterday reserved decision on the application of Mrs. Beatrice Provost Nugent for the appointment of a receiver for the property of her late grandmother, Mrs. Roxy M. Smith, who left an estate of $6,000,000. Mrs. Nugent, who is contesting the will of Mrs. Smith in the Surrogates' Court, alleges that she and her uncle had an agreement to divide whatever the testatrix left them in her will.

This document created a trust fund of $500,000 for the granddaughter and left to Mr. Smith, the son, about $1,400,000. Mr. Smith married Claire Staley, an opera singer with the Chicago Opera Company, without the knowledge of his mother, although his niece, Mrs. Nugent, knew of the marriage.

In making the alleged agreement with him to divide whatever they received under the will of Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Nugent also agreed, she said, to keep the marriage of her uncle a secret. She now asks that Mr. Smith live up to the terms of their pact.

Also Asks Injunction

Resides asking a receivership, Mrs. Nugent petitioned the court for an injunction restraining her uncle or his wife from removing any securities or mortgages belonging to the estate from safe deposit vaults. Henry Beckman, counsel for Mrs. Nugent, argued that the receivership and injunction were necessary to protect his client from damage without the possibility of redress. Mr. Beckman said that notwithstanding the agreement with his niece, Mrs. Smith brought a replevin proceeding to obtain these mortgages from the American Trust Company. Counsel for Mrs. Nugent obtained an order enjoining Mrs. Smith from getting the mortgages. Mr. Beckman said he understood Mr.

and Mrs. Smith were about to go abroad.

In opposing the motion of Mrs. Nugent yesterday, Mr. Smith submitted an affidavit in which he said that his mother was opposed to the marriage of Mrs. Nugent, and that in talking about the affairs of her estate Mrs. Roxy Smith said it might be a mistake to let her granddaughter have too much money, because it might be squandered.

Repudiates Agreement

Mr. Smith, referring to the fifty-fifty agreement with his niece, said that he signed it without consulting an attorney and that Mrs. Nugent and her attorney refused to delay the signing until he could do so. He now repudiates the agreement. Mr. Smith also said that his mother was informed of his marriage long before her death.

Counsel for Mr. Smith opposed the move for a receivership and an injunction, saying there was no need of either, as no interests of Mrs. Nugent were in jeopardy.

Girl Cheats Ellis Island By Starving Self Free

Slips Sister In, Dressed in Her Clothes, and Hunger Strikes Her Own Way Out

Stephania Wantropaska, who has been on a hunger strike ever since she was arrested at Ellis Island three days ago, had a square meal last night at her own home. Physicians reported that her condition was so serious when she was arraigned before United States Commissioner Hitchcock that he paroled her in the custody of her attorney instead of sending her to Bellevue Hospital under bail.

Stephania was arrested because she had enticed her sister from Warsaw to enter the United States after Poland's quota of immigrants had passed the immigration barriers. Stephanian's sister was doomed to deportation. Stephanian got a pass and went to Ellis Island to visit her. The young woman who departed with the pass, clad in Stephanian's clothes, was not Stephanian but her sister. Stephanian's sister has not been seen since. When the ruse was discovered Stephanian was arrested, a procedure which seemed to her so unjust that she declared a hunger strike forthwith.

Fitzpatrick Is Believed Slain From Ambush

Drug Raider Murdered in Pier Washroom After Ship Battle and Not a Suicide, Officials Say

Two Bullets Discovered

Investigators Think One, at Least, Was From Gun of Lurking Assassin

New evidence unearthed yesterday by the government Narcotic Division is said to indicate strongly that Frank J. Fitzpatrick, government narcotic detective, was murdered in a washroom on the Atlantic Avenue pier in Brooklyn, following the sensational drug and liquor raid on the Grecian liner King Alexander last Friday morning. The first theory of suicide, advanced because of Fitzpatrick's ill health, does not hold in the light of new circumstantial evidence, it was said yesterday.

Colonel O. G. Forrer, Commissioner of Narcotics, who came on from Washington to conduct the investigation into the death of Fitzpatrick, said: "I am under orders from Washington not to divulge any information until this investigation is completed. That may not be for several days."

Colonel Forrer had just finished taking a long stenographic statement from a new witness, regarded as important.

Two Shots Fired

Wallace D. J. Collins, United States District Attorney, who conducted a personal investigation of the King Alexander affair, said: "I do not believe Fitzpatrick committed suicide. The murder theory in the case is being thoroughly investigated. You will remember that two shots were heard after Fitzpatrick entered the washroom. Only one bullet was found in Fitzpatrick's body. This bullet penetrated his heart. He could not have fired a second shot. One bullet was found imbedded in the wall and the other pierced his heart. That he fired a shot into the wall first is not likely. There is a window in the washroom, and the shot which killed Fitzpatrick might have been fired through this window."

It is said that Colonel Forrer, after talking to Mr. Collins, began to incline to the murder theory yesterday. The shot in the wall apparently was fired at an unusual, if not an impossible, angle to Fitzpatrick's gun. It is also known that the pier was alive with persons who had good reason to fear Fitzpatrick and the other raiders. These included stevedores, laborers, sailors and others.

Federal Attorney Collins has openly said that he has information that certain customs employees had criminal knowledge of the smuggling operations of the crew of the King Alexander.

When Fitzpatrick left his companions and went alone to the washroom he was in the enemy's country, so to speak, and he was exposed to possible gun fire from the open window, or from the gun of any one who might have been in hiding. Men were found hiding in many places after the spectacular gun fight. That one of these fugitives might have been in the washroom when Fitzpatrick entered is regarded as possible. A man hiding there might have shot Fitzpatrick through fear of arrest, officials say.

Troubled with sleeplessness?

Drink milk!

DRINK a glass of milk just before you go to bed. Don't drink it too cold. In cool weather it is better to have it slightly warmed.

The effect is soothing to most people. It seems to induce sleep.

Some physicians claim that the result is due to the mild action of the digestive organs — that the energy of the blood is directed to digestive processes. We all know the unnatural lethargy that follows a too-heavy meal.

Milk produces sleepiness, and as milk is so easily assimilated there is no chance of disturbing effects that other foods might cause if eaten immediately before retiring.

Milk is not a medicine. It is a food. Here, in New York, it is a body-building food of a definite standard of purity.

Drink milk yourself. Give it to the children. It contains vitamins, essential to adults, but vitally necessary to young, growing bodies.

The Chicago Daily News

Reaches 7 Out of 9

of the Entire English Reading Population.

How, therefore, can any National Advertiser ever hope to cover the Chicago Market without full use of The Chicago Daily News.

Practically every local advertiser and merchant in Chicago knows that Chicago can not be covered and sold so completely and at so low a cost in any other way.

And in coming into this middle west with any campaign always remember that it is The Chicago Market proper, which is the three million population of Chicago itself, that must be put over first. Do that job thoroughly and you will find that the so-called greater Chicago Territory, which includes the thirteen million more people in the five surrounding states, will be waiting for you when you come. Keep that firmly in your mind along with the fact that in Chicago the one paper that reaches seven out of nine of the entire English reading population is THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS.
